

Journal of Interprofessional Care

Call for papers – Themed issue on COVID19

The Journal of Interprofessional Care (JIC) is the premier publication in the scientific field of interprofessional studies in health and social care, encompassing interprofessional education (IPE) and collaborative practice. From its inception, the Journal has maintained a social mission to promote collaboration in education, practice, and research worldwide; and a responsibility to fostering interprofessional developments across established and emerging regions. The Journal is disseminated internationally and encourages submissions from around the world.

The JIC Editorial Board is keen to support the interprofessional community in its response to the current COVID19 pandemic, as well as ensure lessons learned through this experience are not lost, and best practice is shared widely. We welcome contributions on the impact of, response to and experiences relating to the COVID19 pandemic that maintain an explicit interprofessional focus; and represent a diversity of settings, professions, and fields.

Papers submitted under this theme will still be subject to our usual rigorous, double-blind peer review process; but submissions will be prioritised and the review process expedited. Accepted papers will be made immediately available online and remain FREE to access.

Deadlines

To ensure timely processing of papers, without overloading reviewers and editors during these difficult times, we established a system of staggered submissions:

- 15th May 2020 – for Editorials & Commentary papers up to 3000 words
- 22nd May 2020 – for Empirical, Review or Discussion papers up to 7000 words
- 29th May 2020 – for Short Reports of innovations & experiences up to 1500 words
